

“When Death Comes Close” is a CD of poems written and read by Margie McCallum; it is especially for people who are dying, and for those who are experiencing the death of someone close.

Last year at the Transitus Gathering, Margie shared some the poems that are now part of this collection.

Margie’s poetry is informed by assisting people in preparation for death, and for funerals, their own or others’, and in midwifing the dying. It also springs from her own experiences of death at close quarters.

Judith Pigeon has this to say about the CD:

“I have been utterly moved by your beautiful CD. Rarely have I encountered something so 'good'. I use the word advisedly, in its fullest meaning. This work has an integrity and purity whereby 'good' is the perfect description for it: 'good' meaning the best it can be; 'good' meaning beautiful of soul; 'good' meaning pure; 'good' meaning wholesome and uplifting; 'good' meaning true. Your deep love and understanding caress the listener. I am delighted to recommend it to anyone and everyone.”

The CD comes in a beautiful wallet with a 32-page booklet of the poems. It costs £12 and is available by contacting Sarah Williams:
